Today, BPI (the current owner of the CVA brand) is continuing the recall effort in an attempt to find all of these guns. So far, about 96% of the approximately 55,000 recalled guns have been accounted for. The CVA Voluntary Recall remains in effect and BPI continues to mention this in our CVA catalogs and on our CVA web page.

Very nice! I picked up a used CVA off another forum for a Kaibab hunt. It's been fun to dial in. What's the story with the 400gr limit? I ignored the owners manual, at my own risk, to play with some 460gr no excuses. They shoot great with 70 grains by volume of 209. Recoil is pleasant and way more economical to play with than a lot of other ...

Saw a CVA Bobcat with synthetic stock for sale at local shop, no scope mounted just the iron sights. I am trying to save cash to buy a different gun but the Bobcat is a gun I have some experience with and I don't yet have a muzzle-loader. I do not want a in-line muzzle loader because I like the looks of the older percussion style.
